Hi <<First Name>>

As we step through February 2025, the AI Christian Partnership is excited to share some of the latest thinking at the intersection of faith and technology. This month, we gaze into the crystal ball of AI's future with John Lennox, explore China's Deep Seek AI marvel, and ponder the curious case of .... paperclips.

James Poulter interviews John Lennox

Our latest core team member James Poulter interviewed John Lennox at a recent CV Global conference. James, himself a world expert in AI, engages renowned Oxford professor John Lennox in a wide-ranging discussion including the overlap of AI and personality, the place of regulation, and how we as Christians maintain hope.

how China's DeepSeek rocked the AI world

DeepSeek has developed an AI model that rivals leading Western counterparts at a fraction of the cost. This development sent ripples through both the tech industry and the stock markets. Chris Goswami talks to Premier Radio about the geopolitical implications, and how Christians can engage with AI well, (including some feisty questions from listeners less than convinced!)

An ethical reflection on idols and paperclips

In our latest blog post, we delve into the ethical considerations of AI advancement. Tim Bull discusses scenarios where AI could lead to unprecedented benefits or potential dangers, emphasizing the importance of recognizing the limitations of technology and reminding us of the biblical warnings against idolatry.

The AI Christian Partnership

We are a group of Christians partnering together to promote AI literacy. We believe that AI may be a powerful tool for ministry when aligned with Gospel values.

Any individual Christian is welcome to sign up for updates – you will receive occasional emails, no more than once per month. Christian organizations with an interest in AI are invited to contact us to explore potential collaborations.
